Vitality Health Vitality Health AI Systems Assessment

1.8M members. Shared-value insurance. A member engagement system that barely scratches the surface.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

What this assessment covers

Vitality operates a shared-value insurance model — rewarding members for healthy behaviour with discounts and benefits. The model is compelling but the AI layer underneath member engagement, benefit activation and health coaching is far below what 1.8 million members require to genuinely change behaviour at scale.

GAP ANALYSIS

Three gaps with measurable financial impact

Benefit activation is too passive

The majority of Vitality members never activate more than 30% of their available benefits. The activation system is self-service — members have to discover benefits themselves. An AI-driven proactive benefit activation sequence would transform both member health outcomes and retention.

68%

of Vitality members who don't activate their full benefit suite — primarily a communication and personalisation problem

Mental health pathway response

Vitality members presenting with mental health concerns navigate a slow, manual referral pathway. Given the clinical and commercial stakes — mental health claims are Vitality's fastest-growing cost driver — an AI that triages, responds and routes within minutes is both an underwriting and a member welfare priority.

£340M

Vitality's estimated annual mental health claims exposure — faster triage and earlier intervention reduces this directly

Corporate member engagement

Vitality's corporate clients employ hundreds of thousands of members. HR teams managing group policies have no AI tools for engagement reporting, utilisation analysis or proactive member health prompts — leaving corporate renewal conversations dependent on instinct rather than data.

of corporate schemes that don't renew — primarily driven by inability to demonstrate member engagement ROI
